

Susi, first of all, I want to apologize for not responding to your messages or saying anything. I needed space to think, and while it may not seem right to you, I truly needed it. I hope you can understand.

Thank you for the wonderful years we spent together. I learned so much and got to know myself better during our time together. I'll always be grateful and carry the good memories, but I believe it's best for both of us to end things here.

This decision is based on what's best for both of us, but also prioritizing how I feel and what I want. Despite our relationship being better than many others, there are things about how we handle situations or do things that don't fully align. These differences are part of who we are, and I don't expect you to change, nor will I change who I am.

Additionally, I feel our relationship shifted to something more like a marriage rather than a romantic partnership. A moment that stood out to me was when you got upset about a comment I made regarding our future home—it felt out of sync with where we are in life. You're just starting university, and I'm just beginning to build my life too.

Lastly, I tend to give my all in relationships, often neglecting my personal goals. When we got back together, I noticed I couldn't focus fully on my work or projects. At this stage in my life, I want to dedicate myself entirely to building my future.

Writing this is difficult, but I think it's the best for both of us in the long run. I hope you can understand and forgive me. I wish you the best in everything you do
